Classes Taught

Honors 101: The Intellectual Tradition: Ancient World: Intensive, eight credit class on the history, religions, philosophy, and literature of the Ancient Western World.

Philosophy 210: Critical Thinking: An introductory class on the foundations of Western Logic. Explores the means and ends of argumentation and considers deductive and inductive reasoning, argumentation’s relation to emotion, and various ethical issues that arise within arguments.

Philosophy 211: Introduction to Philosophy: A survey of the defining problems and debates of the Western philosophy. The subject matter is drawn from a range of historical eras and geographies including ancient Greek philosophy, early Christian theology, Enlightenment thought of eighteenth and nineteenth century Europe, as well as twentieth century American philosophy.

Philosophy 311: Social and Political Philosophy: A survey of the great thinkers and debates of social and political philosophy. Exploration of the works of seminal thinkers in the canon of Western Political Philosophy including Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Aquinas, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Kant, Mill, and Marx. Also entails readings on leading theories of justice including contractarianism, utilitarianism, socialism, libertarianism, feminism, and environmentalism.

Philosophy 320: Ancient Western Philosophy: An upper-division survey of Ancient Greek and Roman Philosophy. It starts with an examination of Pre-Socratic Philosophy, and then explores the contributions of the Sophists, Socrates, Plato and Aristotle and concludes with a survey of Greek and Roman Hellenistic Philosophy.

Philosophy 322: Contemporary Western Philosophy: A survey of Nineteenth and Twentieth Century philosophy and philosophers. One of the most important questions addressed by the class will be how to use reason after the collapse of the Enlightenment. Some of the most prominent philosophers studied in the class include Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, John Stuart Mill, Søren Kierkegaard, Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Bertrand Russell, William James, W.E.B. DuBois, John Dewey, Simone De Beauvoir, Michel Foucault, and Jurgen Habermas.

Philosophy 430: Special Periods: 19th and 20th Century American Philosophy: This course is designed to introduce intermediate students to the American philosophical tradition. We will consider approaches to traditional philosophical problems unique to the American condition. The readings included in this course address questions about the justification of belief and its relationship to conceptions of identity, race, and community.

Philosophy 430: Special Periods: Latin American Philosophy: This course is an advanced seminar on the philosophical traditions of Latin America that starts with a survey of the indigenous, colonial and scholastic traditions of Mexico and Peru. It then explores the political thought of the independence movements of the 18th and 19th centuries. Next it engages the legacy of positivist, feminist, existentialist and pragmatist philosophers of the 19th and 20th centuries in the region. In exploring the incredible variety of Latin American philosophy we will not only engage arguments addressing traditional philosophical fields such as ethics, metaphysics and epistemology, but we will also delve deeply into questions of identity, race, and community.
